MISCELLANY.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer, Jan. 3. A Wager Between a Man and wife-A Well-known Merchant Loses, and is Handsomely Sold

About two months since, a well-known and popular merchant in this city, and his accomplished lady, in the presence of several friends, entered into a wager that one of the two was to perpetrate a practical joke on the other, and whichever was defeated in first heing "sold," should undergo a penalty to be inflicted by the triumphant party. The On the 1st day of May, 1864, made to the Auditor of the State of Kentucky, in compliance with an act, entitled "An act to regulate Agentics of Foreign Insurance Companies," approved 3d March, 1856.

Emancipation In Kentucky.

Delivered in the Senate of Kentucky, January 9th, 1865, in support of the resolution introduced by him as chairman of the committee on Federal Relations, recommending the adoption of the amendment of the Federal Constitution, declaring the abolition of Slavery throughout the United States. .

The resolution that I have reported from the Committee on Federal Relations was purposely framed so as to be comprehensive enough to embrace in its support men who, viewing the subject to which it relates as an original question from widely different standpoints, aevertheless concur in the conclusion which it announces. Whoever may much angry controversy, the burden of eo many political platforms, and the theme of shall record the bitter irritations and the stormy conflicts it has engendered.

The attitude of the question so far as it fully presented by the Governor, in his message communicated at the opening of our session; and while I dissent from some of his conclusions, I read the following extract,

Whatever may be the views of statesmen or moralists as to the merits of slavery unwhich fleaven seems to have designed to respect all circumstances, or as a means for the accomplishment of temporary purposes, I have no hesitation in declaring my conviction that such an institution was nevered designed to be permanently maintained and perpetunted in a civilized and Christian land But while I thus deprecate the institution of slavery as resting upon princis land But while I thus deprecate the institution of slavery as resting upon principles which nre utterly indefensible, I would not involve in the same condemnation all who uuder any cirsumstances, are, or have have desired it, and whoever may now deprecate it, it must be equally apparent to all that the days of the institution of slavery in this nation are numbered, and that it very soon pass away forever. Review of News.

Fort Fisher has at length fallen into its rightful owners, hands. Gen. Grant thought it necessary to have it, and he has it. Admiral Porter and General Terry went in this time to win, and they won. The work was short, quick and decisive. Army aud navy played their parts well and in perfect harmony, and the finale was a perfect success. The Fort is ours, with its armament of 72 guns, some of large calibre, and rifled, sixteen days' rations, and about 2,000 prisoners. The enemy's loss in killed and wounded is from 500 to 700. 'The Federal loss in killed and wounded, is about 900. The three brigade Commanders, leading in the ussault, were wounded, two of them it is feared fatally. Thus has fallen another of the enemy's strongholds, and their last seaport. Gen. Bragg bragged in vain-his impregnable defence couldn't withstand the "Yankees." Our gunboats are moving up Cape Fear river and have driven two of the rebel pirates, the Chickamauga and Tallahassee before them. The official despatches regard ing the capture of Fort Fisher will be found in another column.

From Secretary Stanton we learn that Sherman is on the move. Two corps of his army have already landed at Beaufort, South Carolina, and the rest were advancing by land, the enemy retiring before them

Four large steamers have been launched in the Clyde, to run the blockade in Wilmington. Others are building for the same purpose. The next steamer from our shores will carry out the distressing news that their occupation's gone. The Clyde ship-builders, and all the English blockade running crew will rue the day when they commenced their complicity with the rebellion.

The House has concurred with, and the President signed the Senate resolution repealing the Reciprocity treaty. The Committee of Ways and Means will report a bill to repeal the duties on printing paper.

A few detachments of Federal coldiers had a fight with guerrillas at Bardstown on Tuesday afternoon, the 17th. Several bands of guerrillas, under Capts. Pratt, Magruder and Sue Mundy, had concentrated for the purpose of attacking the jail to resene one of their number confined there. Captains Nichols and Young, 34th Kentucky Volunteers, superintended the operations against the guerrillas. Alter a brisk fight they were routed and driven from the town, being pursued until nightfall. Capt. Pratt was killed. Sue Mundy and a scoundrel hamed Marion were severely wounded, but were removed by as guards for the trains being charged for their friends. Several others were killed and the trip. The trains leave regularly and complete.

And speech to the earnest attention of our readin conversation in regard to the probability ct the success of the last Wilmington movement, he said, "I shall be a winner in any event. If the attack is repulsed, I shall be person or by threats, with Lincoln men, in justified in not having made the assault on Fort Fisher with my handful of troops. If the attack succeeds, my country will be the gainer, which suits me quite as well."

Lieut, Gov. Jacob has reached Washington, having been recalled from his exile by President Lincoln. He predicts a peace within sixty days; the people of Richmond, unconnected with the Government, are all he asserts, for peace, while the army is a unit in its favor.
